

Dear Sir,

For the last 35 to 40 years I have been served very well by Canada Post through their National Philatelic Centre and since 1960 through their delivery of my mail throughout Canada wherever I lived. I have appreciated and liked their services and would not like to see any changes that could disrupt this vital for all Canadians service. As with so many national institutions I understand that competition and bottom line are important but one should never fool around with an essential service like the mail. British Columbia Health services felt it should do something with the record keeping of the medical information and guess what it now is an American company looking after our medical records – cheaper most likely, but what happens if a dispute arises? Let us keep Canadian services fully Canadian and let us keep Canada Post the way it is. I am a 71 year old naturalized Canadian and proud of it. Let us keep Canada Post the way we have come to appreciate it and let us not fool around with try-outs for the sake of try-outs or for the sake of saving a few dollars. Canada Post is a Canadian Institution and it should remain that way.

Thank you!
