

I strongly disagree with not only the deregulation of any aspect of the post office, but of the fashion in which this review is being undertaken.

This is most certainly a case of "if it is not broken, do not fix it". Canada post works.

The only benefit to any deregulation is to profit private enterprise, (i.e. FEDEX or UPS) who seem to be doing just fine. If they aren't, well, it's not up to the government to bail out private companies.

Canada Post works, It is profitable. It employs many Canadians. Why are we trying to change a good thing?
