

Dear Lawrence Cannon, Minister of Canadian Post,

I strongly object to deregulating the Canadian postal system.

I am a rural resident dependent on consistent and affordable delivery to my small community post office.

Canada Post needs to be affordable, deregulation will destroy the ease with which mail moves easily now.

All the newly privatized services rurally, "suck" - they are no good for the citizens of Canada. They do make money for the owners, but that isn't the goal, they are to provide "service".

Privatize , and we get lousy expensive service. .
Keep the Canadian Postal Service intact please.

"Proportional representation makes every vote count, and every vote equal. As such, it ensures majority governments really do represent a majority, whether under one party's banner or in coalitions. It opens up the political market to new competitors, and encourages parties to compete in healthier ways: by the earned increments of persuasion, rather than winner-take-all bets on split votes and other vagaries of the current system" -?

"The fastest way to kick-start the shift away from a centralized economy is to stop financing the big banks—and through them, the activities they are financing—and to switch your bank deposits to a well-managed, community bank or credit union. In fact, it's the single greatest point of leverage you have as a consumer". -Solari
