

Stats Can has identified a persistent rift in living standards between rural and urban Canadians. Because of the selective service and tariffs private companies offer, (otherwise known as cherry picking), that rift would be further exacerbated. As a stakeholder, (employee), at Canada Post, I must admit exclusive privilege is a subsidy for rural service, however losing that privilege would transfer the burden of subsidy onto the Canadian taxpayer and or rural Canadians.

Benjamin Fairless

BC