

Dear Post office review,

What our Post office means to us is you can mail a letter from anywhere in the country to anywhere in the country for .52.

We believe Canada post should remain a public service. If Canada post is deregulated, we as Canadians would pay much more to send letters, our services we enjoy today will be cut, and jobs in the community would be lost.

We know Canadians who live in rural isolated communities and how they rely on the postal service to communicate, and receive goods which they order from around the world. For some isolated communities this is their only means of communicating. To take this privilege away would be an injustice.

Canada Post should look at reducing its environmental footprint. Hybrid vehicles, more door to door delivery and build green safe healthy buildings are just of couple of easy steps it could implement to help our environment.

We as Canada Post employees earn a reasonable wage with good benefits, to have such good jobs in the community is vital. Customers come to know their letter carriers, and look forward to seeing them each and every day as they bring them their mail.

Canada Post should look at expanding door to door delivery of mail, create more jobs in communities, and to reduce their impact environment , but most of all, keeping Canada post a public service which is affordable, and universal to all Canadians, no matter where they live.

We hope the strategic review committee will take into consideration our comments, on why Canada Post should remain a public service and not be deregulated.

The Canadian Union of Postal Workers,
St. John's local
R Murray
Newfoundland